SUMMARY

At the crossroads between Strada Repubblica and the church of St. John, there is a sky-to-earth house with a historical taste, with once-in-a-kind looks and original and elegant architectural elements. We are in the historic villages of Parma, adorned with pastel-colored houses and flowery balconies, and enter a slice of the house that stretches over five floors. At the entrance we are in a first environment that lends itself well as an anteroom/studio, from which you can access a laundry area and the cellar. Through the internal staircase, you enter the first floor, where two large rooms are presented: the first is ideal as a living room, living area or study, and the second lends itself as a room with balcony, communicating with an adjacent room, perfect as a walk-in closet. The floor is complemented by a shower room. The upper floor follows the same plant. The third floor is currently equipped with the kitchen and a spacious...
